After nearly a decade of work, scores of historical chancery records from Scott County dating back as far as 1816 were recently digitized, indexed and made available for public viewing by the Library of Virginia in Richmond.

Program to restore and index its collection of chancery causes covering the years 1816 to 1942.

Digital images of all Scott County causes prior to 1912 have been placed on the library's Virginia Memories website for public viewing via the Chancery Records Index.

Taylor said he was pleased that the years-long process has finally come to an end.

"I'm excited about the project's completion and that the chancery records are preserved and available to the public for free at any time of day or night," Taylor said.

Taylor, who has been in office since 2000, said the project was one of the first he undertook when he was elected.

"The goal of this grant is for all of the clerks that have records from pre-1913," Taylor said. "Those are considered sacred"

Haslam proposes $33.2M for facility at Northeast State Governor to speak at college Friday

By HANK HAYES

BLOUNTVILLE — Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam is expected to talk more about his planned strategic education investments when he visits Northeast State Community College Friday for a 10:30 a.m. speech at the Wellmont Regional Center for the Performing Arts.

Haslam, a Republican, delivered his "State of the State" message to lawmakers on Monday, and his upcoming talk at Northeast State was described by his communications office as a "State of the State follow-up."

In his message on Monday, Haslam insisted lawmakers must address the rising cost of college tuition.

"We have to make a college education more accessible, and we have to make sure we have quality programs in Tennessee,"

INSIDE
Gov. Bill Haslam told participants in a school safety summit on Tuesday that the state is committed to doing what it can to provide better security at Tennessee schools. Page 6A.

Haslam explained. "Only 32 percent of Tennesseans have earned an associates' degree or higher. That's not good enough. Our goal is to move the needle so that Tennessee is on track to raise that number to 55 percent by 2025. ...We begin our 'Drive to 55' — a strategic initiative to have the best trained work force in America."

Haslam also unveiled his $32.6 billion budget proposal, which includes $33.2 million in capital funding for a Northeast State technical education complex that will be directly tied to advanced manufacturing in the region. The project will use $22 million in bond financing.

The 120,000-square-foot complex on Northeast State's main campus will include business and advanced technologies programs,

Motorist killed in Kingsport crash

From staff reports

KINGSPO RT — A Tuesday morning traffic crash in Kingsport has killed a woman, who police say would have sustained less severe injuries had she been wearing her seat belt.

Kingsport police report the incident occurred at about 5 a.m. on Bloomingdale Pike at the intersection with Bloomington Drive.

A 2005 Mazda 6 was westbound when the driver failed to negotiate a curve, crossed the eastbound traffic lane and exited the roadway.

Police say the Mazda then struck a power pole and concrete culvert before coming to rest.

The female driver was transported to a local hospital and died of her injuries. She reportedly was not wearing a seat belt.

The victim has yet to be publicly identified pending the notification of her family.

It's currently not known what caused her to lose control of her car. An investigation is continuing.

'Old Faithful' Kingsport plans waterline work on Truxton, Konnarock, Warpath

mlane@timesnews.net

KINGSPO RT — City leaders have authorized a nearly $1 million waterline project along Konnarock Road, Warpath Drive and Truxton Drive.

The Truxton Drive work will replace one of the few remaining sections of the original and problematic "Old Faithful" waterline.

The project will replace 6,375 linear feet of waterlines along Truxton and the section of Konnarock/Warpath from Sherwood Drive to Fort Henry Drive. Earlier this month, the Board of Mayor and Aldermen awarded the bid for the project to Tipton Construction Company in the amount of $954,000.

Chad Austin, water and sewer maintenance manager for the city, said construction will likely begin in the March/April time frame with the contract calling for a 150-day construction period.

Truxton's 16-inch cast iron pipe will be downsized to a 12-inch ductile iron pipe, which Austin said would help with the hydraulics within the water system.

"Basically, it's going to push water into different areas that we need because the water tank in that area fills up quicker than anything else," Austin said. "This replacement) will help the tank not fill up as quick and make for a more efficient operation."

The Truxton line dates back to 1929 and is part of the original waterline that ran through the downtown area, the infamous "Old Faithful" waterline. "Old Faithful" was a 5-mile, crosstown water main that broke dozens of times in the late 1990s and early 2000s and was responsible for numerous downtown floods.

It was officially decommissioned in 2003 following a three-year, $7 million replacement project.

"We've had two or three breaks on Truxton recently and it just needs to be replaced," Austin said. "The joints are what's caused the problem. Over time the joints expand and cause these catastrophic failures. The whole top of the and teach computer science, business management, automotive technology, and welding and metal fabrication, according to Northeast State. It will house 40 faculty offices, three classrooms, six computer labs and 30 technical labs.

The budget proposal also includes $1.5 million for an East Tennessee State University fine arts classroom, $1.3 million to update ETSU's elevators and $1.5 million for ETSU lighting replacements.

Total capital outlay improvement requests in the budget proposal totaled $443.2 million.

The requests presented in the proposal as recommendations to lawmakers reflect meeting State Building Commission requirements.

In his spending plan, Haslam called for a 1.5 percent pay raise for state employees; upgrading nearly 200 case manager positions in the Department of Children's Services; adding $100 million to the state's Rainy Day Fund bringing it to $456 million on June 30, 2014; and cutting the sales tax on food from 5.25 percent to 5 percent.

Digitization of Scott records completed and scarce records and (the library) wants to take care of them. This is part of that project that wants to repair, index and scan the records. Once that's done, they house the originals in the library because they have the light and temperature control that can keep them from being damaged."

Taylor described the preservation as a major project for his office since much of the early work of preparing and indexing the documents was carried out in the clerk's office.

"We flattened, repaired and put them in acid-free file boxes. Every name that's mentioned in those chancery causes is indexed, so that took a lot of work," Taylor said. "You actually had to sit there and read them. You didn't want to miss anything, so it took time to do that."

"I wanted to do the work in-house so we could have control of them. When they left here they were in the responsibility of the Library of Virginia because they are such important records."

The library took control of the chancery causes in 2004. After nearly an eight-year delay caused in large part by budget cuts, the indexed documents were scanned and digitized for public viewing.

The original documents are now being stored in a special climate-controlled room at the library in Richmond, Taylor said.

According to the Library of Virginia, the CCRP program has posted over 7 million documents from 58 localities since 2005.

The causes are important, Library of Virginia Director of Local Records Services Carl Childs said, because they help tell the story of the state's early history.

"These records are important because they help document the rich history of Scott County and its inhabitants," Childs said. "To truly understand the history of a region, a person must research the records of the local circuit court, particularly the chancery records, as they provide critical information for historians, genealogists, and other researchers."

Chancery, or equity, cases are considered a valuable source of local, state, social, and legal history. The causes often contain things like divorce records, transfers, correspondences and property lists — including slaves and heirs — as well as vital statistics with details not available elsewhere.

According to the library, cases contain useful biographical, genealogical, and historical information and document a broad spectrum of citizens ranging from rich and poor, black and white to slave and free.

Childs praised the work done by Taylor and his office to ensure Scott County's early chancery causes were preserved.

"Their recognition of the importance of preserving these records helped ensure the success of this project," Childs said.

Taylor agreed about the historical importance of the causes as they relate to Scott County and the people that once lived there.

"The importance of the records is genealogy and history of early Scott County, not Richmond, not the eastern part of the state, but Scott County," Taylor said. "I'm a history buff myself, and this is all about our history. ... I was told once when I was in training that the clerk's office is like a treasure chest that's just waiting to be explored."

Scott County's records are especially important, Taylor said, since it served as a gateway to the west due to its location on the Wilderness Trail.

Two cases from the early 1800s depict confrontations between Native Americans and early English settlers of Scott County, while later cases deal with the plight of slaves and their quest for freedom.

One cause in particular, Taylor said, showed the efforts a free African-American mother from Scott County made to liberate her two children from slavery.

Certain cases document post-Civil War relations by showing the bitterness that remained between Union and Confederate residents living together in Scott, while others are more humorous.

One light-hearted entry from an 1898 divorce centered on a "knocking spirit," which was a ghostly disturbance the defendant's counsel suggested was used by the plaintiff to scare his client.

The CCRP grant was one of 11 grants Taylor has received to help preserve various documents from the county's early history.

In addition to the chancery records, Taylor said he has received funds to restore and digitize the county's first minute books, deed books, marriage records and other important documents.

Taylor said he wouldn't have been able to complete those restorations without the help of the Library of Virginia's grant program.

Taylor said his goal in doing the work is to eventually restore all of the historical documents in his office and make them available for public viewing.

"The clerk is responsible for all records, whether its a new record from today or from 1815," Taylor said. "You're the keeper of the records, and it's your job to preserve them for future generations. It really gets back to the importance of who we are here in Scott County."

Kingsport officials plan waterline replacement

Once the Truxton line is replaced, Austin said the only remaining section of "Old Faithful" will be the section from Stone Drive to Sullivan Street. In the next five years, that section likely will be replaced, but the city does not have a specific project drawn up to replace it, Austin said.

As for the Konnarock/Warpath phase of the project, that waterline dates back to the 1940s and it is also a cast iron pipe. The reason for the replacement is because over the past couple of years, the line along Konnarock has burst four or five times, each time being "pretty catastrophic," Austin said.

The 12-inch line along Konnarock will be replaced with a newer 12-inch line and will mark the third such replacement in this area of town in recent years.

Kingsport replaced a section of the line along Warpath from Fort Henry Drive to Memorial Boulevard about six years ago; the second phase went from Center Street to the John B. Dennis Highway back in 2009.

Austin said the new waterlines will be installed down the middle of Konnarock/Warpath while a portion of Truxton will be in the center of the road. Because of this, road closures are likely to occur during construction.

However, there shouldn't be any significant water outages during construction.

"There may be some just to tie the meters back in. There may be a couple of short outages and if there's anything planned, we would let the public know well ahead of time," Austin said. "Once we get finished with this, the streets will be repaved and be in much better shape than it is now."
